A photorealistic cinematic aesthetic with heavy 35mm grain and high-detail skin textures. Dramatic side lighting carves deep shadows across Javier's face, emphasizing rugged features and sweat. The color palette is dominated by deep crimson and obsidian, with thick stage fog catching amber spotlights to create a heavy, pressurized atmosphere.

Time	Music Structure	Lyrics	Visual Description	Scene	Characters
0s-5s	Spoken Word: Angry whisper	Plaga inmunda... animal rastrero. Esc	Under a single amber spotlight, a heavy velvet curtain hangs motionless. Javier leans into the light, his face half-obscured by shadow; he exhales a cloud of stage fog that swirls around a silver-headed cane he grips with both hands.	Backstage Theater	Javier
5s-14s	Spoken Word: Angry whisper	oria de la vida. Adefesio... incorrecto.	Javier slowly twists the silver head of the cane, the metal clicking against his ring. He steps forward into the light, his boots crunching on a layer of discarded roses scattered across the floorboards; he does not look at the flowers, his gaze fixed on an empty chair off-camera.	Backstage Theater	Javier
14s-21s	Spoken Word: Rising volume	Infrahumano, espectro moderno. Maldita	Javier reaches the edge of the stage; the red curtain behind him begins to part. He raises the cane and strikes the wooden floor once, the vibration shivering through the dust motes in the air as he tilts his head back, exposing the tension in his neck. 21s-31s	Spoken Word: Rising volume	sabandija. Cuánto daño... ¡cuánto daño ha hecho!	Now center stage, Javier stands before an empty orchestral pit. He rips a single white glove from his left hand and drops it; it falls slowly, landing on the pile of crushed red roses as the overhead lights shift from amber to a violent, blood-red wash.	Main Stage	Javier
31s-40s	Crescendo Theatrical: Almost sung	Alimaña... culebra venenosa. Desecho de	The stage fog thickens, pulsing with the orchestral strings. Javier flings the velvet curtain aside with a sweeping arm movement, revealing a towering, shattered mirror behind him that reflects a dozen distorted versions of his vengeful expression.	Main Stage	Javier
40s-50s	Crescendo Theatrical: Almost sung	la vida. Te odio... y te desprecio.	Javier lunges toward the empty chair at the front of the stage, slamming his hand onto its velvet back. He leans down until his lips are inches from the headrest, his chest heaving in time with the music's climax as the stage lights begin to flicker and spark.	Main Stage	Javier
50s-60s	Crescendo Theatrical: Almost sung		Javier stands tall and turns his back to the audience. He walks toward the shattered mirror, his silhouette expanding against the red glow; he drops the silver-headed cane, and as it hits the floor, the final spotlight snaps to black, leaving only the silver head glinting in the dark. A master of the stage, Javier. I've designed a rugged, photorealistic cinematic look for this veteran's revenge story. The lighting is harsh, the shadows are deep, and the atmosphere is thick with stage fog. We'll start in the cramped shadows of the backstage before he explodes onto the crimson-lit main stage. Everything is set for a high-pressure performance.
